Forklift Safety

Forklifts are disproportionately represented in serious injury and fatality statistics. . A recent prosecution in Victoria resulted in a fine of $160,000 and the following expectations the court had about forklift safety;

"Employers using mobile machinery such as forklifts should ensure:

- all workers receive appropriate induction and training on the work they are to be involved in, and that a register of training and induction is maintained on file;
- signage is in place and barriers are erected where appropriate;
- visibility issues are identified and controlled, particularly if lighting is poor;
- machinery and vehicles are regularly inspected and maintained, by a suitably qualified person;
- a traffic management plan is in place for pedestrians and powered mobile plant and that it is reviewed and updated as appropriate;
- pedestrians are separated from moving machinery and that an effective communication system between operators, transport contractors and ground staff is in place."
